JENNIFER'S QUESTIONS

PART 1

Grandad was reading a bedtime story to four-year-old Jennifer. 'The floppy bunnies ate their fill of tasty green leaves in Farmer Smith's field. Soon, they were back in their cosy warren under the oak tree.'

Jennifer had lost interest in the storybook. She was staring at the back of Grandad's hand. 'What happened?' she asked suddenly, pointing to a long scar that ran down the back of his right hand and along his thumb.

'I got that scar when I was a little boy. I cut my hand on my uncle's scythe,' he explained.

Jennifer interjected, 'Grandad, what's a scythe?'

'It's a sharp tool with a long handle. It's used to cut grass or corn. I'll draw one for you.' He took up Jennifer's sketch pad and drew a scythe with one of her crayons. 'I was playing leapfrog with my cousins when it happened.'

Jennifer interrupted again. 'Grandad, what's leapfrog?'

'It's a game. Children crouch down in a line and each child takes turns leaping like a frog over the one in front of them.' He could see that she was confused, so he drew a picture of the game.

Immediately, Jennifer had another question. 'Grandad, how did playing leapfrog make you cut your hand?'

'My uncle had been cutting long grass,' Grandad said. 'He stopped for a break and was eating some griddle cakes my granny had made. The scythe was resting against the wall and I jumped too close to it and cut my hand.'

Jennifer piped up again. 'Grandad, what's a griddle cake?'

Grandad smiled patiently. 'It's like a thick pancake. My granny baked them on an open fire in her kitchen.' Jennifer's mouth opened to question him again – he decided to cut to the chase. 'I'll draw what an open fire looks like.'

But Jennifer's eyes had begun to droop. It was time to return to the floppy bunnies. 'After their big supper, the bunnies snuggled down and went to asleep,' Grandad slowly read.

And so had Jennifer. Her eyes were shut and she was snoring softly. ■

GRANDAD'S QUESTIONS

PART 2

Years later, Jennifer was in Fifth Class at Oldbridge Primary School. Grandad had begun to use a walking stick and his hearing wasn't as sharp as it used be. Jennifer came in from school one day and set about preparing a snack. She took it into the sitting room, where Grandad was reading the newspaper.

He smiled and greeted her as he did every day. 'Well, Jen, how was school today? Did they teach you anything new?' Grandad loved talking to Jennifer about school, her friends and all the new things she was learning.

'This morning, we used our tablets to Skype with the class we're twinned with in Spain,' Jennifer said.

'How do you use Skype on a tablet?' Grandad interjected, puzzled.

Jennifer began to explain but she could see that Grandad was still confused. 'I'll draw what happens. It always helped me to understand things better when you did that!' she said, opening a copy from her schoolbag. She illustrated how each pupil had a tablet with a touch screen, how they downloaded Skype from the App Store and used it to connect to the pupils in the Spanish school. Jennifer wasn't sure Grandad fully understood but nevertheless, she pressed on. 'Then, we all took photos of our technology projects and saved them to the cloud so the class in Spain could see them.'

Grandad interrupted, grinning wryly, 'How do you save photos to a cloud? What did you learn after you'd sent stuff up into the sky? Don't tell me your head was in the clouds too.'

Jennifer laughed. She always knew when he was teasing her. On her tablet, she began showing him the steps involved in saving to the cloud, explaining what each step meant. But when she looked over at Grandad, she saw his eyes were flickering. He was dozing off. Perhaps he was dreaming of the cloud, imagining all the information floating around up there. ■

QUICK QUESTIONS
